Religion and the Adolescent Girl: A Formative Study in Kaduna State, Nigeria

Key Findings

Introduction

The female share above the estimated one women in which religion are the major causes and consequences of socio-economic status and women's freedom. The subjective and objective morality of women's freedom is not a matter of ex ante "natural" freedom, but of ex post conditions of women's freedom with a gender perspective. The objective freedom of women's freedom is not ex ante "natural" freedom, but is ex post freedom with a gender perspective.

Grand Findings

adolescent girls' shyness and vulnerability are attributed to the lack of a sense of freedom.

More than a third of girls are too shy to answer questions about their autonomy and economic empowerment because they feel they lack freedom to express themselves. Among girls, 36.7% said they are too shy to answer questions about their autonomy and economic empowerment because they feel they lack freedom to express themselves.

Education

21.7% of girls said that they felt too shy to answer questions about their autonomy and economic empowerment because they feel they lack freedom to express themselves.

Child and Adolescent Marriage

The survey shows that girls who are currently attending primary schools are more likely to be married in the future. However, 31.1% of girls who are currently attending primary schools said they would be married in the future. This indicates that girls who are currently attending primary schools are more likely to be married in the future.

Economic Empowerment

71.6% of respondents believe that their economic empowerment and independence of the adolescent girl is crucial to her future success.

Key Insight

The key insight is that girls who feel they lack freedom to express themselves are more likely to be married in the future. This suggests that girls who feel they lack freedom to express themselves are more likely to be married in the future. The key insight is that girls who feel they lack freedom to express themselves are more likely to be married in the future.